Joseph Hynes of the Wall Street Digest visited me this morning. He has been occupied for some years in efforts to create a favorable climate in Europe and the United States in favor of European integration movements. Following my talk with him, Monnet called me about a similar conversation he had had with Hynes as well as to mention other subjects.

At lunchtime I went to a shooting school near Meudon conducted by Mr. Manby and shot at some 50 clay pigeons. Manby is an Englishman, [redacted] established in France in this business for about thirty years, and seems [redacted] knowledgeable.

The Grahams and ourselves went to a large dinner at the Dillons' tonight, where I sat between Lew Douglas's sister-in-law and Mrs. Beall, the wife of the Senator from Maryland.
